

Archaeology

Date : August 14, 2012

Working with what remains.

Archaeology is not so much an academic discipline as a way of thinking and engaging with things.

This might result in something like a story or account of what happened, or a curated collection. But archaeology is not primarily about the past so much as encounter, based upon the past's resistance to decay, its presence, and implying a care for the past to persist into the future.

Binchester excavations - 2009